December 2024

Greetings Family!

By the time you receive this issue of the Minuteman Magazine the only, truly Christian holiday, Thanksgiving, will be over. Honestly though, we need to be totally thankful each and every day for the myriad of blessings we enjoy each day. Most importantly, the promise of eternal life in paradise with our Saviour should keep us rejoicing daily! No matter what we face in our brief lifespan here on earth that is The Hope that gets us through the trials of this quickly vanishing time here on earth. A "promise" and assurance so wonderful that the tribulations we face each day will seem as nothing very soon. (Rom. 8:18)

There can be no doubt that we are living in "perilous" but exciting times. We are seeing so much prophecy being fulfilled on a daily basis! Our faith should be increasing daily as we see God's Word being fulfilled.

Matthew 24 and Luke 21 so early describes the last days that I feel certain that anyone that "wants" to see and understand what we see happening worldwide is fulfillment of Christ's prophecies written in these passages. In Luke 21:26 Christ said hearts of many will fail them for what they see happening on earth. But in verse 28 we are told to look up! Our redemption is nearing us quickly! Praise God!

Keep lifting praise to our Heavenly Father and looking for the day appointed that we can go home!

We love all of you in Christ!

In Chris's service,

Pastor Butch

‘Sign of Things to Come’: Singapore Approves 16 Insects for Human Food

Singapore became the latest country to authorize insect products for human consumption, in what The Guardian described as a move that “paves the way for plates to become wrigglier, leggier and more sustainable” and as “a sign of things to come.”

by Michael Nevradakis, Ph.D.

Singapore has approved 16 insects as food for humans — becoming the latest country to authorize insect products for human consumption, in what The Guardian described as a move that “paves the way for plates to become wrigglier, leggier and more sustainable” and as “a sign of things to come.”

In a July 8 announcement, the Singapore Food Agency (SFA) approved the 16 insects, which include silkworm pupa and mealworm, “With immediate effect.”

“These insects and insect products can be used for human consumption or as animal feed for food producing animals,” the SFA stated.

Countries and entities such as the United Kingdom (U.K.), Australia and the European Union (EU) have already approved some insects for human consumption. However, in the U.S. existing regulations contain few references specifically addressing insects.

This regulatory gap has enabled an ecosystem of “alternative protein” startups to enter the insect food market — with the backing of figures such as Bill Gates and government agencies including the United Nations (U.N.) and the Defense Advanced Research Projects Agency \(DARPA\) and the National Science Foundation.

“The United Nations Food And Agricultural Organisation (FAO) continues to promote insect consumption as an environmentally friendly way to get protein in your diet — for both humans and their livestock,” The Guardian reported.

Proponents of insects as food for humans, including the FAO, argue this will help combat climate change, as insects produce a smaller carbon footprint than traditional livestock. But critics challenge this view.

“The justification for insects is to produce protein using fewer inputs: to save the planet by reducing climate change, methane from cows, less pollution,” internist Dr. Meryl Nass, founder of Door to Freedom, told The Defender. “But just because it is protein doesn’t mean it’s good for us.”

Nass cited parasites that could be spread by insects, difficulties in digesting insects, and common allergies to chitin — commonly found on the exoskeleton of insects.

According to Nass, lax U.S. Food and Drug Administration (FDA) regulations, under which many insects can be classified as “Generally Regarded as Safe” (GRAS), “means they don’t require testing” and enables the FDA to “look the other way.” This has opened the door for insect foods to reach consumers.

“How long will it take before we learn whether these foods are safe? It could take generations,” Nass said.

“Advocates for mass consumption of insect-based foods would like you to believe that bugs have been a reliable source of protein for thousands of years,” said Seamus Bruner, author of “Controligarchs: Exposing the Billionaire Class, their Secret Deals, and the Globalist Plot to Dominate Your Life.”

Bruner, who also is director of research at the Government Accountability Institute, told The Defender:

“While that is true, malnutrition and disease were also endemic and life expectancies were dramatically lower than they are today. The truth is that beef, pork, poultry and other animal-based foods are the most efficient and healthy sources of protein. These climate fanatics pushing insect-based foods are scaring people into adopting less healthy diets.”

Dutch journalist Elze van Hamelen told The Defender that using insect ingredients for pet food also poses a risk to public health, citing a 2019 study that found parasites in 244 of 300 insect farms and pet stores that were investigated.

“Feeding pets with parasite-infested insects, especially pets that do not have the physiology to digest bugs, may not be such a good idea,” van Hamelen said.

Michael Rectenwald, Ph.D., author of “The Great Reset and the Struggle for Liberty: Unraveling the Global Agenda,” told The Defender, “The insect craze is intimately connected to the U.N.’s Agenda 2030 Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs).”

Rectenwald cited two SDGs: SDG 2, “End hunger, achieve food security and improved nutrition and promote sustainable agriculture” and SDG 12, “Ensure sustainable consumption and production patterns.”

“‘Sustainability’ is code language for coerced reductions in consumption and forced behavioral modifications,” Rectenwald said.

Nass said the U.N., along with the World Economic Forum (WEF), “promote the so-called SDGs, which can supposedly be met if we change our diet.” Yet, “We don’t see the WEF or U.N. attendees eating insects at their meetings.”

Nass suggested that one reason behind the shift to insects as food is “to cause emotional harm: to degrade, debase, downgrade human beings” and that beef is “being demonized,” potentially to “weaken the species.”

“The idea seems to be to get rid of small producers and create a fully industrialized system of food production that Cargill, ConAgra, PepsiCo will profit from,” she added. “Bill Gates claims his investments in alternative proteins are to save the planet,” Bruner said. “What he does not say is that they are part of a strategy to monopolize the protein industry — for profit — as he lobbies to ban animal-based competition.”

Insect firms in Singapore ‘educating’ children about insects as a food source
The 16 insects Singapore’s SFA has approved include “various species of crickets, grasshoppers, locusts, mealworms and silkworms,” The Straits Times reported. According to The Guardian, foods containing insects must clearly label this on the packaging, “to indicate the true nature of the product.”

The Straits Times reported that local restaurant chain House of Seafood is already “cooking up a menu of 30 insect-infused dishes to give customers more choice,” while other firms have begun “educating consumers” — including children — about insects as a food source for humans.

The report cited the example of Altimate Nutrition which, “While waiting for SFA’s regulatory approval ... conducted workshops and educational sessions at almost a hundred schools, from pre-schools to institutes of higher learning.”

Surveys conducted after the program found that about 80% of students would be willing to try the insects after they are approved, The Straits Times reported.

But Bruner said other factors are likely at play in Singapore.

“The WEF — perhaps the largest driving force behind so-called ‘alternative proteins’ — frequently touts Singapore’s compliance with Agenda 2030, so the decision to prioritize insect-based foods is not surprising,” he said.

EU, U.K., Australia and other countries approve insects for consumption

Authorities in the EU, U.K. and Australia, among other countries, have also approved certain insects for human consumption.

Brussels Signal cited Ermolaos Ververis, scientific officer for the European Food Safety Authority Novel Foods Team, who said the EU has authorized six insects: “Alphitobius diaperinus larvae products, dried mealworms, whole and ground yellow mealworms, whole and ground Grasshoppers, whole and ground crickets, and partially defatted Whole Cricket Powder.”

Eight applications are still pending in the EU, where according to EU regulations, foods containing insects must be clearly labeled.

Brussels Signal reported that under Horizon Europe, a European Commission — the executive branch of the EU funding program for research and innovation — “insect-based proteins are considered one of the key areas of research.”

U.K. authorities have approved four insects for human consumption — yellow mealworm, house cricket, banded cricket and black soldier fly, as “novel foods,” while Australia has approved three species: two varieties of mealworm and a cricket. According to the FAO, there are more than 1,900 “edible insect species.” However, insects don’t appear to be included in the FAO’s Codex Alimentarius — its international food safety guidelines.

‘Nudging’ the public toward acceptance

Several studies, including a 2020 report by the European Consumer Organisation, a 2021 YouGov poll and a 2022 report by UBA, Germany’s environmental agency, suggest low demand among the public for consuming foods containing insects.

Other studies in 2020 and 2022 suggested people would be more willing to shift their attitudes after being told about the “environmental benefits” of eating insects.

The 2020 study suggested that “nudging” — a behavioral science concept supported by the National Science Foundation — could be used to this end. “As humans are a particularly social species, leveraging the social nature may prove particularly useful,” the study said.

In a 2021 European Food Safety Authority report, Giovanni Sogari, Ph.D., an assistant professor in the Department of Food and Drug at the University of Parma in Italy, suggested, “There are cognitive reasons derived from our social and cultural experiences, the so-called ‘yuck factor’, that make the thought of eating insects repellent to many Europeans. With time and exposure such attitudes can change.” And Lies Hackelbracht, the owner of TOR Royal, an insect production company in Belgium, told Euronews in 2021, “When we are 9 billion people, it won’t be possible to let everybody eat meat, so we have to search for other possibilities with a lot of protein and it can be in plants, but it can also be in insects.”

Bug Diets, Once Labeled ‘Conspiracy Theory’ By MSM, Now Becomes Fact After UK Gov’t Backs ‘Sustainable’ Food

By Tyler Durden

Earlier this year, NPR’s Code Switch, Gene Demby and NPR reporter Huo Jingnan discussed, “The conspiracy theory alleges that a shadowy global elite conspires to control the world’s population, in part by forcing them to eat insects.”

Well, do we have news for them...

This leaves us with a new report from The Telegraph titled “Public will get the bug for eating insects under Government-backed drive.”

Here’s more from the British paper:

A research centre backed by the Government will work to get insects and other meat alternatives onto supermarket shelves and make them more palatable to the public.

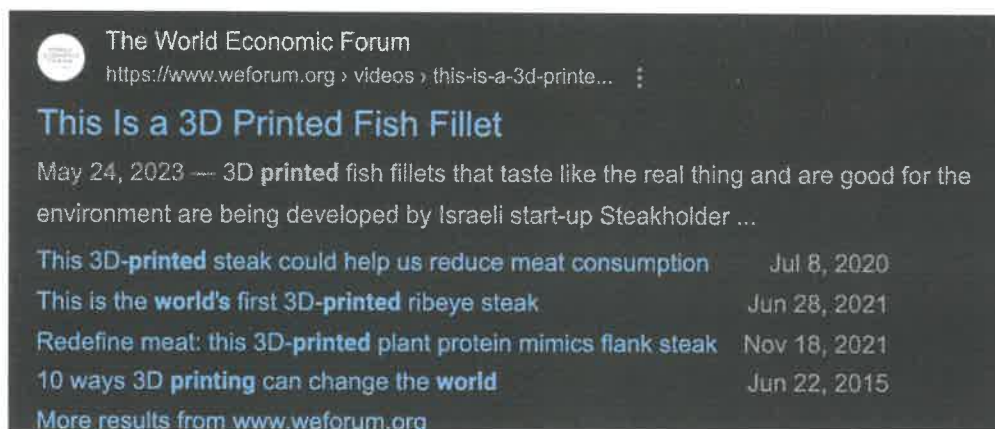

Innovation in meat alternatives has risen in recent years amid growing recognition of the environmental impact of animal agriculture, which accounts for around 80 per cent of greenhouse gas emissions from food production globally.

Mince created from crickets harvested in Cambridge and pet food made of chicken cultivated from egg cells are two of the products recently launched by British-based companies which it is hoped will become more widely available.

The National Alternative Protein Innovation Centre (NAPIC) will look at how to cut red tape and ensure food safety, while also exploring ways to sell meat alternatives to shoppers through focus groups and surveys.

Prof Anwesha Sarkar, from the University of Leeds, the research center that will ensure bugs are safe for human consumption, noted, “We want to make alternative proteins mainstream for a more sustainable planet.”

In addition to insects, Bill Gates has backed a lab-grown meat company called UPSIDE Foods, while the World Economic Forum has pushed lab-grown meat propaganda.

Meanwhile, Western governments are locked in a concerted effort to reset the food supply chain towards sustainability. That means weaponizing climate policies to bankrupt small and medium-sized farms, ensuring a complete mega-corporate takeover of the food supply chain, and eventually, the long game is to transition the world onto an insect and fake meat diet.

However, there is great news: former President Trump and RFK Jr. have come out against this diabolical food reset plan by supporting small farms.

Seriously, we're running out of conspiracy theories...

Just remember what Henry Kissinger once famously said, “Who controls the food supply controls the people; who controls the energy can control whole continents; who controls money can control the world.”

To save a nation, the control of the food supply chain must be handed back to small farms.

Thanks To The Cost Of Living Crisis, U.S. Household Debt Has Soared To The Highest Level Ever Recorded

MICHAEL SNYDER

Our entire economy is fueled by debt. In fact, if going into more debt was suddenly banned the U.S. economy would instantly hit a brick wall. For the vast majority of us, our lifestyles simply cannot be funded by what we actually make. So we use debt to bridge the difference, and this has particularly been true during the cost of living crisis. Total household debt has now reached a grand total of 17.8 trillion dollars, and we continue to pile up more with no end in sight...

A quarterly report published this month by the Federal Reserve Bank of New York on household credit and debt found that between the first quarter of 2021 and the second quarter of 2024, credit card debt surged 48.1% while household debt — which includes mortgages and auto loans — rose by 21.6%.

In dollar terms, credit card debt rose from $770 billion in early 2021 to $1.14 trillion in the most recent quarter, while household debt increased from $14.64 trillion to $17.8 trillion in the same period.

I did not realize that credit card debt had risen by more than 48 percent since the first quarter of 2021.

That is extremely alarming, because it indicates that millions upon millions of households are literally living on the edge of financial disaster.

And the fact that delinquency rates have been climbing just underscores how serious things have become...

Amid American households' rising debt burdens, delinquency rates have grown as well. In the last 12 months, about 9.1% of credit card debt balances and 8% of auto loan balances moved into delinquency — the highest levels since early 2011 and the end of 2010, respectively.

The primary reason why U.S. households are racking up so much debt these days is because the cost of living crisis has made it very difficult to make ends meet.

One voter that was interviewed by Fox News admitted that her money “went a lot further four years ago”...

“My family’s income hasn’t changed, but our comfort level has significantly decreased,” stay-at-home mom and homeschool teacher Persson said. “Money went a lot further four years ago. We were able to cover our bills and still have money saved. The economy has plummeted with the current administration, and to add on to that, where I live in California, the cost of living is much higher.”

Additionally, 44% of the survey respondents said they aren’t making enough take-home pay to cover their daily expenses.

Did you catch that last sentence?

Almost half of the entire nation is not “making enough take-home pay to cover their daily expenses” at this point.

Wow.

According to a recent survey that was conducted by CNN, the cost of living crisis is a major issue for approximately two-thirds of the country...

However, there are still times when the truth seeps out. CNN commissioned a well-constructed poll of about 2,000 random people to find out where they stand on personal finances. The headline number: nearly 40 percent of Americans are struggling to pay their bills. That is up from 28 percent from only three years ago, and a higher number than back in 2008–09, the period known as the Great Recession.

wo-thirds of people say that the number one issue they face is the cost of living and paying their bills. The typical American is spending nearly $1,000 more per month compared with three years ago just to pay living expenses. That is according to Moody’s, but it also fits with the intuition we all have.*

This is why household debt levels have been exploding.

Most people are just trying to find a way to make it from one month to another.

Unfortunately, economic conditions are really starting to deteriorate and large employers are conducting mass layoffs all over the nation.

For example, General Motors just announced that over 1,000 salaried employees will be getting the axe...

General Motors is laying off more than 1,000 salaried employees globally in its software and services division following a review to streamline the unit's operations, CNBC has learned.

The layoffs, including roughly 600 jobs at GM's tech campus near Detroit, come less than six months after leadership changes overseeing the operations, including former Apple executive Mike Abbott leaving the automaker after less than a year in March due to health reasons.

Considering all of the credit card debt that is being piled up, you would think that Mastercard would be doing well, but they have also decided to fire lots of workers...

Approximately 3% of Mastercard's workforce are facing layoffs, with the payment services company slated to finish a "majority of the notifications" in the third quarter, the company said in a Friday statement to FOX Business.

Not to be outdone, Cisco has determined that it is time for "7% of the company's workers" to hit the bricks...

Cisco is embarking on a restructuring to "allow it to invest in key growth opportunities and drive more efficiency in its business." That effort will involve laying off 7% of the company's workers, according to a Securities and Exchange Commission (SEC) filing.

Last but not least, Intel has started the process of laying off approximately 15,000 workers...

Intel's layoffs, announced Aug. 1, will result in some 15,000 employees losing their jobs.

They will arise out of a "comprehensive reduction in spending" that the tech giant said it was pursuing to "resize and refocus." The company aims to trim costs by $10 billion in 2025 through its overall cost-reduction plan.

This is just the beginning.

A lot more layoffs are coming.

So if you have a job that you greatly value, try to hold on to it with all your might.

Meanwhile, we continue to get more economic numbers that indicate that the U.S. economy is rapidly heading in the wrong direction.

In fact, we just learned that the Conference Board's index of leading economic indicators has fallen for the 29th month in a row...

*And now, we have US Leading Economic Indicators down for their 29th straight month – at a level worse than the trough of COVID lockdowns...

How can anyone claim that our economy is moving in the right direction when our most important leading economic indicators have been falling for more than two years?

Let's be honest.

Economic conditions are not good right now, and the outlook for the future is absolutely dismal.

We have been living on a sugar high. We have accumulated the largest mountain of household debt in the history of the world, the largest mountain of business debt in the history of the world, and the largest mountain of government debt in the history of the world.

Now all of those bubbles are starting to burst, and that means that a tremendous amount of pain is dead ahead.

Measuring our Impoverishment

By
eric

Back around 1982, you could buy a Big Mac at McDonald's after working at McDonald's for half an hour. I know -- because I did both.

I worked at McDonald's when I was still in high school, back in the '80s, after school and on weekends. I was paid what was then the minimum wage – $3.35 per hour. A Big Mac cost about $1.50.

It looked pretty good, too.

That's the way it was.

How is it now?

The minimum wage is $7.25 per hour- about twice what it was in the '80s – And a Big Mac costs about \$5.70 cents – about four times what it cost in the '80s. It doesn't look so good anymore, either. But the take-home point is you'd have to work about an hour at McDonald's to be able to afford to eat at McDonald's today.

Assuming you could afford to drive a car to work.

Back in the '80s, most teenagers had their own car because it was possible to buy one on a teenager's means. All it took was about $500 to buy an operable beater and – again – I know because I was there. Even adjusted for inflation – as the blase phrase goes, as if the deliberate devaluation of the buying power of money were some kind of natural, inevitable thing like aging – that $500 '80s beater car would be about $1,600 today. If you could find an operable car for that sum. A set of “inexpensive” tires typically cost as much today as we paid for a whole car back then.

We could afford gas, too.

Because back then, a gallon cost about $1. That made it financially feasible for 17-year-old kids working weekends and after-school at McDonald's to put 20 gallons of gas in the tank of their beater muscle car, with a V8 engine.

Again, I know – because I was there.

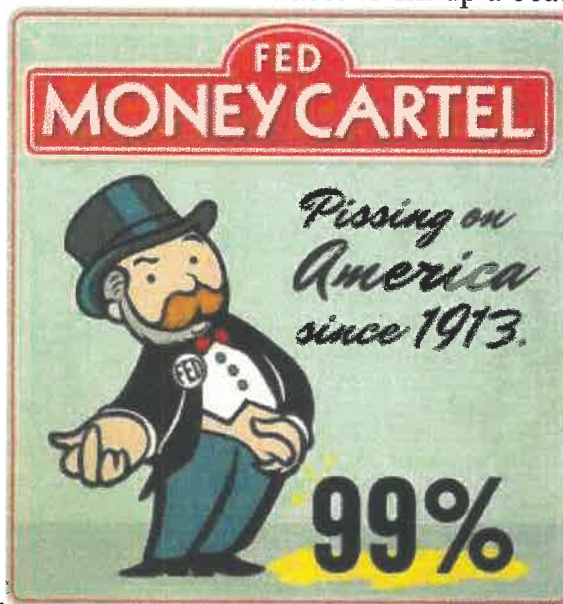

One of my friends and co-workers at McDonald's drove a beater '71 Plymouth GTX with a 440 V8, which he was able to buy with cash because back in the '80s, muscle cars from the '60s and '70s were just old beater cars and if you could scrounge up $2,200 or so – which is what my friend paid for his '71 GTX – you could buy an old muscle car. And afford to put gas in the tank.

It seems hallucinatory now but if you were to mind-meld with me and could see the parking lot of my high school back in the early '80s, you'd maybe think you were seeing a classic car show. Only back then, Mustangs and Novas and Chevelles and Chargers and Camaros were just old beaters that were routinely driven to school by teenagers. Today, those same cars – in similar condition – cost more than many middle-aged men can afford to spend. In pristine condition, they routinely go for more than it costs to buy a top-of-the-line Mercedes or Lexus.

We kids back then had no idea how good we had it. And the kids today have no idea.

They have been slow-gypped into penury. They can't afford to eat at McDonald's – and working there seems kind of pointless on that account. It costs about $70 to buy 20 gallons of unleaded regular gas today. You'd have to work all day at McDonald's to be able to fill 'er up. More than all day, actually. An eight hour shift at $7.25 would gross you just shy of $60. There are taxes to be paid out of that before you see any of that – including higher Socialist Insecurity “contributions” these kids will never see as “benefits.”

You'd need to work closer to two shifts at McDonald's to be able to fill up a beater muscle car's tank with 20 gallons of gas.

Of course, a kid working at McDonald's today can't afford a beater muscle car in the first place, so it's an irrelevance. But when he can't even afford to buy a Big Mac plus fries and a Coke without spending 25 percent of what he earned – pre-tax – after working all day on that Big Mac, plus fries and a Coke, it's hard to work out why it's worth working at McDonald's in the first place.

The tragedy is that many of today's kids – understandably frustrated, understandably resentful – do not understand the reason for their enslavement. Why they can't afford to work at McDonald's – and forget driving to work there. Or eat there.

They blame the free market. Which is like blaming a duck for barking.

What's happened to make eating at McDonald's unaffordable – and working there a form of sort-of voluntary slavery – is the devaluation of the buying power of money, which is a mechanism not many adults comprehend. Few know that a private banking cartel sells debt to the government – and charges it (and thereby, us) interest on these “loans.” This cartel – which is styled the “Fed” – a deliberate and sinister word-play intended to get people to think it's the government that's doing this to them – can increase the supply of money just like that, devaluating the buying power of the money already in circulation and via this clever trick, suck the value out of working.

But the kids feel the Bern – and if it's not tamped out somehow, so will we all.

The Federal Property Tax

By

There's a reason why you'll never truly own your home. It is called the property tax. It is a yearly tax – paid forever – based on what the taxers say your home is worth this year, irrespective of what you paid for it when you thought you bought it.

You may have paid $250,000 for it many years ago. Maybe because that's all you could afford to pay when you thought you bought it. Fast-forward ten years and the taxers say it is now worth $500,000 and “assess” the tax you are required to pay on the basis of that figure. Your “gains” are $250k – and now you “owe.”

Never mind that no actual increase in your worth – and so your ability to pay – has occurred, because you're living in rather than selling the house.

These ever-upticking taxes on what you may like to think of as your home (which of course it's not; if you are obliged to pay money in order to be allowed to occupy it you are paying rent) serve the dual purpose of preventing you from ever truly owning your home and eventually forcing you out of your home.

Via the ever-increasing rent-styled-property-taxes the “owner” will eventually no longer be able to pay.

This happens routinely, especially to older people who aren't able to work full time any longer, who bought their house years ago when they thought they could afford to live in it. They were able to – at the time – based on the income they had and the taxes as they were. But when their income is no longer sufficient to pay property taxes that have doubled over time, they are obliged to sell.

In Most U.S. Cities, Social Security Payments Last Married Couples Just 19 Days Or Less

BY TYLER DURDEN

THURSDAY, NOV 14, 2024 - 08:05 PM

Relying solely on Social Security for retirement, especially as a married couple, may need a serious second look. New findings from GOBankingRates reveal that in 50 major U.S. cities, Social Security income won't even cover a full month's expenses. At best, these benefits might last up to 19 days, but in six of these cities, they fall short in under 10 days.

GOBankingRates conducted an analysis of the 100 largest U.S. cities by population, using the average Social Security benefits for married couples to assess how far this income stretches when set against living costs.

The recent study reveals that in many U.S. cities, Social Security benefits fall far short of covering even half a month's living expenses for married retirees. In particular, six major cities—including Irvine, Fremont, San Jose, San Francisco, Honolulu, and San Diego—offer the briefest financial coverage from Social Security, with benefits lasting between just 6.73 and 9.59 days, according to GoBankingRates.com.

Irvine, California, stands out as the city where benefits stretch the least, covering under a week's worth of expenses, with a monthly cost of living that exceeds $9,700 for a couple.

The findings show that California is a challenging state for retirees relying on Social Security alone, with 15 of its cities appearing in the top 50 cities where benefits last the shortest.

Within the top 10 cities with the shortest Social Security coverage, California holds seven spots, underscoring the high cost of living in the state. While Irvine ranks as the most expensive, Stockton, California, provides the most days of coverage in the state at nearly 18 days—though even this is well below a full month.

At the other end of the spectrum, Saint Petersburg, Florida, ranks as the city where Social Security lasts the longest among the 50 cities analyzed, stretching to 19.38 days for married couples. This reflects the lower cost of living in Saint Petersburg, where expenses amount to $1,584 monthly.

Florida's comparatively affordable living costs mean that, while Social Security coverage still falls short of a full month, retirees may face less financial strain.

The GoBankingRates.com study showed that beyond California and Florida, cities like Arlington, Virginia, and Seattle also show limited Social Security coverage, lasting only around 10 to 11 days. Arlington, with a monthly cost of $5,307, and Seattle, at $4,733, both represent high-cost areas where retirees might struggle to maintain financial stability on Social Security alone.

Honolulu is the sole representative from Hawaii in the top six, where the high cost of living cuts Social Security coverage to just over 8 days.

The study's detailed breakdown shows a significant disparity between cities, where monthly costs range from $9,794 in Irvine to $1,584 in Saint Petersburg. Even cities with more affordable housing and expenses, such as Gilbert, Arizona, and Austin, Texas, provide just around 16 days of coverage, demonstrating that even in lower-cost cities, retirees would need supplementary income to cover basic living expenses each month.

Ultimately, the findings illustrate the pressing financial challenge facing retirees in urban areas across the United States. With the cost of living continually rising, retirees must consider alternative income sources or substantial savings to bridge the gap left by Social Security benefits, especially in cities where expenses drastically outpace what Social Security provides.

Goodbye Middle Class: Half Of All American Workers Make Less Than $43,222.81 A Year

MICHAEL SNYDER

It is that time of the year again. The Social Security Administration has finally released the final wage statistics for 2023, and they are quite sobering. According to the report, last year the “median wage” in this country was just $43,222.81. In other words, half of all American workers made less than $43,222.81, and half of all American workers made more than $43,222.81. That is terrible news, because the cost of living has been rising much faster than paycheck have. More people are being squeezed out of the middle class with each passing day, but most Americans don’t even realize that this is happening because the media isn’t really talking about it.

Poverty, homelessness and hunger are all growing all around us, and if we stay on the path that we are on the middle class will continue to be systematically eviscerated.

Once upon a time, the vast majority of the country could afford to live a middle class lifestyle.

But now those days are long gone.

A study that was recently released found that it now takes more than $100,000 a year for a typical U.S. household to live “the American Dream” in all 50 states, and in 29 U.S. states it takes more than $150,000 a year...

A household would have to spend more than $150,000 a year to live the dream in 29 of the 50 states, according to an analysis published in April by the personal finance site GOBankingRates.

According to the report, the optimal American lifestyle would cost $137,842 a year in Ohio, $147,535 in Texas, $159,932 in Florida, $194,067 in New York and $245,723 in California.

The state that has the lowest cost of living is Mississippi.

Living the American Dream only costs $109,516 a year in that state.

Needless to say, someone earning $43,222.81 a year is not going to be able to live the American Dream anywhere in the nation.

Even if there are two people earning $43,222.81 a year in the same household, that still isn't going to get you anywhere close to living the American Dream.

When I was growing up, my father worked and my mother stayed home with the kids, and we were still able to live a middle class lifestyle.

But now most households cannot afford to live a middle class lifestyle even if both parents are working.

After reading that, is there anyone out there that would like to disagree with me about the fact that we have been experiencing a long-term economic decline?

What I have been warning about all these years has been slowly but steadily playing out right in front of our eyes.

Not too long ago, a Wall Street Journal/NORC poll found that only about one-third of the entire U.S. population actually believes that the American Dream "is still alive"...

Only about a third of U.S. adults believe the American dream is still alive, a Wall Street Journal/NORC poll published Wednesday found.

A survey of 2,501 people conducted by the Public Religion Research Institute twelve years ago found more than half of respondents believed the American dream "still holds true," but now only a third feel that way, according to a recent WSJ/NORC poll of 1,502 adults. The study also found an increasingly large gap between people's economic goals and what they think is actually attainable — a trend that was consistent across gender and party lines, but was especially common amongst younger generations.

Nobody out there can deny what is happening.

This is our country now, and conditions are getting worse with each passing day.

One of the biggest reasons why the American Dream is out of reach for most of the population is because home prices have gone absolutely haywire over the last four years...

Twenty-four percent of likely voters who rent their homes said that “the cost of housing” is the most important economic issue they’re considering as they decide their vote, according to a CNN poll conducted by SSRS between September 19 and 22.

That’s no surprise: The US is facing a once-in-a-generation housing affordability crisis. In the four years through August 2024, national home prices have risen 45%, according to the S&P CoreLogic Case-Shiller Home Price Index. According to the National Association of Realtors, the median sales price of a home in the US hit a record high this summer and now hovers just below that level.

Renting used to be an affordable alternative for many people, but these days close to half of all renters in this country “spend more than 30% of their income on housing”...

Nor has renting become any easier than buying. Nearly half of US renters spend more than 30% of their income on housing, qualifying them as “cost-burdened,” according to US Census data from September.

In September 2024, the median rent in the U.S. was $2,050 a month.

How are you supposed to be able to afford that if you are making just $43,222.81 a year?

Increasingly, America is being divided into the “haves” and the “have nots”.

If you don’t know which group you belong to, let me clue you in. If you are not making more than $100,000 a year, you are definitely among the “have nots”.

Unfortunately, economic conditions are rapidly getting worse, and we are seeing high profile bankruptcies happen at a pace that we haven't seen since the global financial crisis. For example, one of the largest crafting chains in the U.S. just filed for bankruptcy...

Joann — the craft store chain formerly known as Jo-Ann Fabrics — has filed for bankruptcy amid ongoing financial troubles.

But DIYers need not worry just yet: The company's more than 800 stores nationwide will remain open and its website will stay active as the Hudson, Ohio-based company restructures its finances.

As hordes of businesses fail all over the nation, our historic commercial real estate crisis just continues to intensify.

If you doubt this, just check out these numbers...

The delinquency rate of office mortgages backing commercial mortgage-backed securities (CMBS) spiked to 9.4% in October, up a full percentage point from September, and the highest since the worst months of the meltdown that followed the Financial Crisis. The delinquency rate has doubled since June 2023 (4.5%), according to data by Trepp, which tracks and analyzes CMBS.

I don't even have to tell many of you what those numbers mean.

We are headed for a historic meltdown, and it is going to absolutely devastate small to mid-size banks from coast to coast.

Meanwhile, most Americans are just barely scraping by from month to month as our standard of living steadily deteriorates.

We are in far more trouble than most people realize, and the months ahead are going to be extremely challenging.

BRICS Confirms 159 Participants Will Adopt New Global Payment System; Isolating U.S. Dollar

HAL TURNER

After recent rumblings surfaced of how many nations would embrace the impending BRICS Pay system, the bloc has confirmed 159 participants are set to adopt the new payment system.

Indeed, the economic alliance system is poised to hit the ground running when it finally launches.

Now, all eyes are on when that launch will take place. Many have surmised that it would be announced at the highly anticipated 2024 Summit. Moreover, it would be set to go live in what would be a groundbreaking unveiling. If that were to happen, the bloc has already noted there is a long line of entities ready to embrace it.

Earlier this year, the BRICS bloc announced the creation of a blockchain-based payment platform. It would redefine the collective's global economic standing. Moreover, it would compete with some of the largest payment systems worldwide. That includes the Western-dominated SWIFT system.

Now, the BRICS group confirmed that 159 participants will adopt the new payment system. Indeed, Russian officials verified the number in a recent correction, according to a Yahoo report. Although previous statements rumored 160 countries would be involved, the number was clarified in subsequent reports.

The payment system is crucial to the bloc's ongoing de-dollarization efforts. It will provide participating countries with an avenue to trade in local currencies. Therefore, it will greatly enhance how these nations settle trade; ultimately, decreasing international necessity for the U.S. greenback.

WHY THE EXODUS FROM THE DOLLAR?

Russian President Vladimir Putin yesterday, said this on the de-dollarization of the world economy: "

The financial and political authorities of the United States are pushing this process forward with their not just careless, but unprofessional and stupid actions.

I think that they already understand that they made a mistake, but they simply cannot get out of this rut, it is probably no longer very convenient for them to admit that they made a mistake, but it would be necessary to correct something, they see that the tools they are using do not work.

We are switching to national currencies and that's it. They (American officials) can no longer do this, apparently, only those people who will replace today's generation of politicians can do this. To change something means to admit your mistakes. Apparently, this is difficult."

The Collapse of Fiat Money and Gold's Resurgence

by Nick Giambruno

August 15, 1971.

It marked one of the most significant events in US history, yet most people know nothing about it...

It's been over 50 years since that fateful day forever transformed America and the world.

Here's what really happened.

It's been rightly said that "he who holds the gold makes the rules."

After World War 2, the US had the largest gold reserves in the world by far. Along with winning the war, this let the US reconstruct the global monetary system around the dollar.

The new system, created at the Bretton Woods Conference in 1944, tied the currencies of virtually every country in the world to the US dollar through a fixed exchange rate. It also tied the US dollar to gold at a fixed rate of $35 per ounce.

The dollar was said to be "as good as gold."

The Bretton Woods system made the US dollar the world's premier reserve currency. It forced other countries to store dollars for international trade or to exchange them with the US government for gold.

However, it was doomed to fail.

Runaway spending on warfare and welfare caused the US government to print more dollars than it could back with gold at the promised price.

By the late 1960s, the number of dollars circulating had drastically increased relative to the amount of gold backing them. This encouraged foreign countries to exchange their dollars for gold, draining the US gold supply at an alarming rate.

As a result, the US gold supply dropped by more than half, from 574 million troy ounces at the end of World War II to around 261 million troy ounces in 1971.

The situation pressured the US government to make a drastic decision.

It could do nothing and watch its gold holdings evaporate, which would mean losing enormous financial and geopolitical power. Or it could default on its promise to redeem the dollar for gold.

On Sunday night, August 15, 1971, President Nixon interrupted the scheduled TV programs and made a surprise announcement to the nation—and the world.

Nixon said he was temporarily suspending the dollar's convertibility into gold.

The most obvious lie was Nixon's claim that the suspension would only be "temporary." It's still in place today.

Another egregious lie was that his move was necessary to protect Americans from international speculators. Instead, money printing to finance out-of-control government spending was the real problem.

Lastly, Nixon said removing the link to gold would stabilize the dollar. However, even by the government's own rigged inflation statistics, which understate reality, the US dollar has lost over 87% of its purchasing power since 1971.

The truth is that Nixon defaulted on the US government's promise to redeem the dollar for gold at $35 an ounce. Since then, the dollar has been a pure fiat currency with no backing.

The Oxford English Dictionary defines fiat money as "inconvertible paper money made legal tender by a government decree."

The Fiat Standard

August 15, 1971, was the official start of the fiat currency era.

The world went on a fiat currency standard for the first time.

It gave the US government an unfathomable amount of power.

Having the US dollar as the world's premier reserve currency—without gold backing—allowed Washington to print fake money out of thin air and export it to the rest of the world for real goods and services. It's a privileged racket no other country has.

Without gold to hold it in check, the Federal Reserve—the central bank of the US—could print as many dollars as it wanted. And that's exactly what happened.

1971 was an enormous change in money and finance.

Instead of gold, the fiat US dollar and Treasuries (US government bonds) became the base layer assets—the bedrock—of the international financial system.

Before the adoption of a fiat currency standard, gold had been mankind's most enduring form of money—for over 5,000 years—because of unique characteristics that made it best suited to store and exchange value.

Gold is durable, divisible, consistent, convenient, scarce, and most importantly, the "hardest" of all physical commodities.

In other words, gold is the one physical commodity that is the “hardest to produce” (relative to existing stockpiles) and, therefore, the most resistant to debasement.

Gold is indestructible, and its stockpiles have built up over thousands of years. That’s a big reason why the growth of new gold supply—typically 1-2% per year—is insignificant.

In other words, nobody can arbitrarily inflate the supply.

That makes gold an excellent store of value and gives the yellow metal its superior monetary properties.

People in every country of the world value gold. Its worth doesn’t depend on any government or any counterparty at all. Gold has always been an inherently international and politically neutral asset. This is why different civilizations around the world have used gold as money for millennia.

Yet, most people don’t understand this.

They might say the paper dollars in their wallets and the digital dollars in their bank accounts are money, not gold. But that’s only been the case since 1971, a drop in the bucket by historical terms.

However, that’s all about to change—and soon.

That’s because the fiat system is self-destructing at an alarming rate.

It’s been over 50 years since Nixon ushered in the fiat currency system by severing the dollar’s last link to gold.

Like a carton of spoiled milk left out on the kitchen counter, the fiat currency system is long past the end of its shelf-life.

I believe we’re on the cusp of the most significant changes in money and finance in world history.

In short:

- 1) The fiat currency system centered on the US dollar is on its way out.
- 2) Gold will return to the center of international finance.

I believe this is the logical outcome once you put the pieces together to see the Big Picture.

Holding the physical gold bullion in a private non-bank vault in a wealth-friendly jurisdiction like Singapore, Switzerland, or the Cayman Islands is a good idea.

That's why I just released an urgent new PDF report with all the details.

The Dangers of Money Printing: Thomas Jefferson and the Financial Panic of 1819

By Michael Maharrey

To steal a phrase from Thomas Jefferson, the Federal Reserve and the U.S. government have buried us under a “deluge of paper money.”

We deal with the consequences of this monetary malfeasance every time we go to the grocery store or the gas station. Our rapidly depreciating money buys less and less every single day.

Central bankers and politicians claim to be fighting this inflationary monster, but the ugly truth is that inflation is by design. The political class is destroying your money as a matter of policy.

This is nothing new. Government people have been ruining our money for their gain since the Republic’s earliest days. Sadly, most people don’t realize what’s happening. They believe price inflation is due to greedy corporations, Putin’s price hikes, or voodoo.

As Thomas Jefferson warned, “The evils of this deluge of paper money are not to be removed until our citizens are generally and radically instructed in their cause & consequences.”

Looking at the past can inform us about the present. As the saying goes, history doesn’t necessarily repeat. But it often rhymes. With that in mind, the first American boom-bust crisis in the early 19th century is informative.

During this period. Jefferson’s chilling warnings about unchecked fiat, paper money proved prophetic.

In an 1814 letter to Thomas Cooper, Jefferson wrote, “Every thing predicted by the enemies of banks, in the beginning, is now coming to pass. we are to be ruined now by the deluge of bank paper as we were formerly by the old Continental paper.”

Just one year later, a depression gripped the United States kicked off by financial panic. This economic downturn lasted until 1821 and is widely viewed as the first boom-bust period in U.S. history.

It was exactly what Jefferson predicted.

The depression was rooted in an all-too-familiar problem – excessive money printing.

The economic downturn came on the heels of the War of 1812, which officially ended with the signing of the Treaty of Ghent on Feb. 18, 1815. After the war, banknotes began to rapidly depreciate due to the exponential increase in the amount of paper in circulation.

The First Bank of the United States charter ended in 1811 and was not renewed. The Second Bank of the United States (SBUS) wasn't created until 1816. This led to a proliferation of state-chartered banks.

As economist Murray Rothbard explained in his book, The Panic of 1819, to fund the war, the federal government turned to these state-chartered banks, and they issued large numbers of paper money banknotes far exceeding the amount of gold to back them.

This caused gold to drain from these banks. To keep the money flowing, the U.S. government agreed to a suspension of specie payments from state banks and the situation persisted after the war ended. This allowed banks to make loans with little to no regard for gold reserves to bank them.

It was a formula for disaster.

Jefferson understood this all too well, making his views clear in his letter to Cooper.

“I am an enemy to all banks discounting bills or notes for any thing but coin. but our whole country is so fascinated with this Jack lantern wealth, that they will not stop short of its total and fatal explosion”

On March 23, 1815, the U.S. entered a period of financial panic. It was followed by several years of mild depression culminating in a sharp economic downturn known as the Panic of 1819.

The panic was exacerbated by financial conditions in Europe in the wake of the Napoleonic wars, but it was fundamentally a domestic problem caused by money printing.

Whenever the money supply rapidly expands, as it did during the war years, it creates all kinds of malinvestments in the economy. The expansion of credit fueled land speculation in the West, that likely would not have happened in a more sound monetary environment. Historian George Dangerfield argued that the entire postwar American economy was “based on a land boom.”

Since the U.S. Treasury accepted payments for land in the form of state-issued bank notes, state-chartered banks helped fund this land boom. The problem was most of them lacked sufficient specie to back their paper.

After it opened for business in 1817, the Second Bank of the United States (SBUS) jumped right in to further expand money and credit.

The SBUS had 18 branches. They were supposed to operate with oversight by the main bank in Philadelphia, but the oversight was lax. Meanwhile, the SBUS was supposed to regulate state banks. This oversight was also lax.

Meanwhile, western branches of the national bank got caught up in the land boom mania and began issuing SBUS banknotes at a dizzying pace. In his book The Awakening of American Nationalism, Dangerfield noted that SBUS banks tried to restock their insufficient gold reserves by redeeming their notes for hard money at eastern and northern SBUS branches.

The result was, as Jefferson called it, “a deluge of bank paper” without sufficient gold backing.

According to Rothbard, by 1818, the Second Bank of the United States had demand liabilities exceeding $22.4 million. Its specie fund stood at a mere $2.4 million – a 10:1 ratio. A 5:1 ratio was considered sustainable.

That year, the SBUS tried to rein in the problem by curtailing loans by its western branches. When state banks began presenting their banknotes for redemption at the Second Bank of the United States, it refused to provide gold specie from its reserves. There was simply too much paper and not enough gold. The state banks did the only thing they could do; they began foreclosing on heavily mortgaged farms and business properties.

This led to widespread bankruptcies, bank failures, a collapse in real estate prices, and spiking unemployment.

It was just what Jefferson predicted.

In an 1819 letter to John Adams, Jefferson lamented that the situation would never change or even improve until people understood the root cause of the economic malaise – paper money.

“The evils of this deluge of paper money are not to be removed until our citizens are generally and radically instructed in their cause & consequences.”

Jefferson went on to pinpoint the root of the problem with paper money, “want of a stable, common measure of value, that now in use being less fixed than the beads & wampum of the Indian.”

Jefferson was responding to a letter penned by Adams discussing Chapter 6 of the 1817 Treatise on Political Economy by Destutt de Tracy. Adams cited a passage calling the printing of paper money more ruinous and a greater theft than empires of old shaving off a little gold from their coins and passing them off as full-weight. In other words, Tracy called it stealing.

“A theft of greater magnitude & still more ruinous is the making of paper. It is greater because in this money there is absolutely no real value. It is more ruinous because by its gradual depreciation during all the time of its existence it produces the effect which would be produced by an infinity of successive deteriorations of the coin.”

Adams put it in even harsher terms, writing to Jefferson:

“That is to say an infinity of successive felonious larcenies. If this is true as I believe it is we Americans are the most thievish people that ever existed, we have been stealing from each other for an hundred & fifty years.” [emphasis added]

How much worse are things today?

We can accurately predict another economic meltdown in the future because, after more than 200 years, the problem of paper money remains. The people still have not become radically instructed as to the cause and consequences of the boom-bust cycle that’s fueled by printing massive amounts of paper (and today, electronic) money.

The government continues to print it at a dizzying pace. Just consider that the Federal Reserve created nearly $9 trillion out of thin air since the 2008 financial crisis through quantitative easing alone. That was on top of the expansion of money and credit due to more than a decade of artificially low interest rates.

Economic principles don’t change with the times. In 1788, Jefferson wrote, “Paper is poverty ... it is only the ghost of money, and not money itself.”

It’s still true today.

In other words, Jefferson called it.

His foresight underscores the enduring danger of paper money and government excess, echoing through history’s economic crises.

At this point they should just change the phrase "Conspiracy Theory" to "Logical Assumption"

Control the Weather, Control the World

“That will permit man to determine the world's cloud layer, and ultimately to control the weather. He who controls the weather can control the world.”

— Vice President Lyndon B. Johnson
1962 Commencement Address at Southwest Texas State University

Jerry Barrett

& Mark Looney, ‘Science for the People’ Vol. 7, No. 2, March 1975, p. 22 — 26 & 40),

During U.S. Senate hearings, January 25, 1974, Dr. Gordon J.F. McDonald said:

“As economic competition among many disadvantaged nations heightens, it may be to a country's advantage to insure a peaceful, natural environment for itself and a disturbed environment for its competitors... Such a secret war need never be declared or known by the affected populations... The years of drought and storm could be attributed to unkindly nature.”

Hurricanes Helene and Milton have piqued American's interest in weather, and whether these two storms were created and controlled by our Federal Government. Weather modification has long been studied by universities, scientists, and governments around the world.

Vice President Johnson spoke on this topic at his commencement address to students at his alma mater in San Marcos, Texas in 1962. But research on controlling the weather predates his speech. In 1933 Swedish meteorologist Tor Bergeron and German physicist Walter Findeisen collaborated on a theory that clouds would precipitate if they contained the right mixture of ice crystals and super-cooled water droplets.

In 1946 General Electric scientists, Irving Langmuir and Vincent Schaefer, modified clouds by “seeding” them with dry ice pellets. The United States military supported research in this field from 1947 to 1952.

In Fiscal Year 1966, all of the various government agencies tasked with researching weather control and modification had a budget of about $7.2 million (Report of the SPECIAL COMMISSION ON WEATHER MODIFICATION, NATIONAL SCIENCE FOUNDATION December 20, 1965).

Weather As a Weapon of War

Weather modification was a complicated scientific weapon that the American military experimented with in North Vietnam, South Vietnam and Laos from 1967-1972. The Pentagon spent a total of $21.3 million in flying 2,602 rainmaking sorties over Indochina between 1967-1972.

The program was to determine if increased rainfall could soften roads, cause landslides, and wash out river crossings. Project Blue Nile focused on Vietnam and involved the RAND Corporation, University of Illinois, Yale, Nuclear Research Associates, Systems Science and Software, and TRW, Inc. (URPE

Chemtrails Are Poisoning Us

Stratospheric Aerosol Geo-engineering—chemtrails—has been under way around the world for a number of years. What is seen is a thick white line that lingers in the sky for several hours. These chemtrails are sprayed into the upper atmosphere, which then spread out forming what then appear to be clouds. The particles from these aerosols then fall to the ground where they enter our soil and water and can also be inhaled.

In Shasta County, California, biologists noticed the number of trees dying, grass not growing, and many farmers were having difficulty getting any crops to grow on their farms. The community tested the soil and the results were shocking! Aluminum, barium and other elements were found to be up to thousands of times higher than normal limits.

Retired wildlife biologist Francis Mangels reported about the rapid decline of fish in the rivers and streams of northern California. According to The National Oceanic Atmospheric Administration, the salmon run, once seen in abundance in this area has declined from 769,868 in 2002 to 39,530 in 2009. That is over a 90 percent decline!

In 2008, citizens from Siskiyou and Shasta Counties submitted water tests results to their city and county officials. These tests came from snow pack, rain and pond water samples taken in both counties. Basic Labs, a state certified lab in Redding, performed the testing. Of the three-dozen tests submitted, all showed near or over the maximum contaminate level for aluminum in drinking water for the State of California. Snow pack sampled at Ski Bowl on Mt. Shasta tested for aluminum at 61 times the maximum

How Big Ag Is Killing Insects — and Why It Matters

New research shows agricultural chemicals may play a bigger role in decimating insect populations than previously thought — a phenomenon that can gravely harm food production as certain insects are needed to pollinate key food crops.

1X

By Douglas Main

New research provides evidence that chemicals used in farming may be more harmful to insects than previously thought, contributing to worldwide declines in important species.

In a wide-ranging, first-of-a-kind study published Oct. 24 in the journal Science, scientists found that extremely small, sublethal concentrations of over 580 pesticides, herbicides, fungicides and other chemicals can have serious negative impacts on the behavior and subsequent survival of certain insects.

The scientists tested some of the chemicals on fruit fly larvae, mosquitoes and butterflies.

The results were “very shocking,” said study co-author Justin Crocker, a researcher with the European Molecular Biology Laboratory in Heidelberg, Germany.

The study bolsters the case that agrochemicals play a big role in plummeting populations of insects, a phenomenon that can gravely harm food production since certain insects are needed to pollinate key food crops.

‘A bit scary’

In the paper, researchers exposed 75 fruit fly larvae to three concentrations of 1,024 different agrochemicals.

The smallest level tested (2 micromoles) is well within the range found in the real world; for example, it’s not uncommon to find this concentration of the herbicide glyphosate in streams near crop fields.

After only 16 hours of exposure, they transferred the insects to vials containing chemical-free food, and filmed their behavior. More than half of these substances caused discernible changes in the behavior of developing insects.

These behavioral shifts included changes in the way the larvae crawled, turned, or otherwise moved their body around.

Over 380 non-insecticide pesticides affected many of these traits, as well as a tendency toward “abnormal wandering,” which is linked to a lower likelihood of long-term survival.

“It was definitely a bit scary for us,” Crocker said, especially when imagining the massive scale of what is happening to insects out there in the real world.

The authors also tested some of the chemicals at higher ambient temperatures and found the effects were much more pronounced.

Some of these chemicals had no effect on fitness at lower temperatures, but when the study environment was heated up a few degrees, “it turns to absolute lethality,” Crocker said. “These are not subtle differences.”

That result jumped out at Charlie Outhwaite, a research fellow at the Zoological Society of London who wasn’t involved in the paper.

“Given the climate warming that has already occurred and that will continue to occur, it seems likely that the real-world impacts of pesticide applications will increase considerably if changes are not made,” she said.

A landmark study

Several other outside researchers were astounded by the paper and what it means for the so-called “insect apocalypse.”

“I have conducted research on the impact of toxins on insects for the last 48 years and I am shocked by the severity of the effects that a high percentage of the 1,024 chemicals tested have,” said Philip Batterham, a toxicologist at the University of Melbourne who wasn’t involved in the paper. “This is a landmark publication.”

Most of these chemicals are not considered to be insecticides, but they have pronounced insecticidal activity, said researcher Francisco Sanchez-Bayo, who added he was “surprised by the large number of non-insecticide chemicals that have serious effects on reproduction.” Which is, of course, vital for animal populations to survive. Sanchez-Bayo co-authored a 2019 study in the journal Biological Conservation which investigated the causes the global insect declines, concluding the habitat loss caused by converting land to intensive agriculture was a primary cause, with agrochemicals also playing an important role.

Insect populations and declines vary greatly from place to place, and a few nature reserves seem to have experienced little change in recent decades. But an overall drop is unmistakable, especially in Europe.

In Germany, for example, research suggests the mass of flying insects has declined more than 70% in recent decades.

In the long term, Crocker and colleagues want to create a new platform for measuring chemical toxicity.

In the past, many substances have been judged based on much more blunt measures, such as the LD50 — the quantity that kills 50% of any given population of animals.

“The insects are clearly in decline around us, and these agricultural chemicals are clearly a driver,” Crocker says. “If you’re changing the behavior in these systems it shouldn’t be too much of a stretch to say, it’s impacting the populations.”

The CDC Planned Quarantine Camps Nationwide

BY JEFFREY A. TUCKER

No matter how bad you think Covid policies were, they were intended to be worse.

Consider the vaccine passports alone. Six cities were locked down to include only the vaccinated in public indoor places. They were New York City, Boston, Chicago, New Orleans, Washington, D.C., and Seattle. The plan was to enforce this with a vaccine passport. It broke. Once the news leaked that the shot didn't stop infection or transmission, the planners lost public support and the scheme collapsed.

It was undoubtedly planned to be permanent and nationwide if not worldwide. Instead, the scheme had to be dialed back.

Features of the CDC's edicts did incredible damage. It imposed the rent moratorium. It decreed the ridiculous "six feet of distance" and mask mandates. It forced Plexiglas as the interface for commercial transactions. It implied that mail-in balloting must be the norm, which probably flipped the election. It delayed the reopening as long as possible. It was sadistic.

Even with all that, worse was planned. On July 26, 2020, with the George Floyd riots having finally settled down, the CDC issued a plan for establishing nationwide quarantine camps. People were to be isolated, given only food and some cleaning supplies. They would be banned from participating in any religious services. The plan included contingencies for preventing suicide. There were no provisions made for any legal appeals or even the right to legal counsel.

The plan's authors were unnamed but included 26 footnotes. It was completely official. The document was only removed on about March 26, 2023. During the entire intervening time, the plan survived on the CDC's public site with little to no public notice or controversy.

It was called "Interim Operational Considerations for Implementing the Shielding Approach to Prevent COVID-19 Infections in Humanitarian Settings."

Social Unrest Has Already Started To Erupt, And This Is Just The Beginning...

MICHAEL SNYDER

If you think that the left is just going to sit back and accept Donald Trump's victory, you must not have been paying attention for the past eight years. Trump is the most hated politician in modern American history, and prominent voices in the media continue to fuel that hate by making extremely inflammatory statements. For the moment, many on the left are still in a state of complete shock because they were entirely convinced that they were going to win this election. But once the shock wears off, we will see an explosion of anger, frustration and fury that is unlike anything we have ever seen before.

Unfortunately, we are already seeing signs of what is to come. For example, a man in Michigan has been arrested by authorities for planning an attack "against conservative Christians" because they supported Trump so strongly this election...

A 25-year-old Michigan man is facing federal charges after he allegedly threatened violence against conservative Christians over former President Donald Trump winning the presidential election.

Isaac Sissel of Ann Arbor was arrested Tuesday morning and charged in a federal criminal complaint with making a threatening communication, according to a statement from the U.S. Attorney's Office, Eastern District of Michigan.

Prosecutors said the FBI National Threat Operations Center in West Virginia received an anonymous online threat on Nov. 2, which included details about a planned attack.

Apparently this particular individual was planning to use a stolen AR-15 semiautomatic rifle to hit a high profile target.

During the months ahead, churches all over America are going to need to pay extra attention to security, because there are a lot of extremely unbalanced people out there.

Meanwhile, large protests against Trump have already begun.

For example, last night there was a very loud protest outside of Trump's hotel in Chicago...

Not even 24 hours after President-elect Donald Trump won more votes in Illinois this general election than in the previous two, and after winning the US election in a massive red wave sweep, far-left protesters gathered outside the Trump Hotel in Obama's Chicago.

The protests appear to have been highly organized and well-planned before the election. given the coordination among activists, the hundreds—if not thousands—of protesters—many holding signs—and the likely pre-approved protest routes from City Hall.

Organizers shouted into megaphones, "Trump is a fascist" and "racist," echoing hate speech spewed by the defunct Harris-Walz campaign in the months leading up to November 5.

And there were also sizable protests in New York and Philadelphia...

NYU students have gathered near Cadman Plaza Park in New York to protest President-elect Donald Trump's victory, chanting slogans like "NYU, your hands are red. over a hundred thousand dead!" and "Hey hey, ho ho, Donald Trump has got to go." Although the crowd is currently small, similar protests are unfolding in Chicago and Philadelphia.

The synchronized timing of these demonstrations has raised speculation that organized funding may be behind the protests.

This is just the tip of the iceberg.

Just like in 2016, I expect that things will really start to get crazy once we get to Trump's inauguration.

Some on the left are anticipating open conflict once Trump gets in. The Washington Post has published a feature story about a former officer in the Capitol Police named Michael Fanone that seems to have gone nuts. He has run off to a compound in the woods, and he is fearing the worst from a Trump presidency...

Michael Fanone leaped off the couch and lumbered toward his fridge, retrieving his fifth (or sixth?) beer. He glanced at the TV, took a sip of Sapporo and offered his first thought on a second Donald Trump presidency.

"Better  arm yourselves."

Apparently Fanone is planning to die in his compound if there is any type of showdown with federal authorities...

His tone was somehow both furious and serene. He saw this coming, and on Tuesday night some in America were starting to arrive at the place he'd already been living for the past 46 months. "I didn't vote for that ," he said, "and I fought tooth and nail to prevent this day from  coming."

He'd learned about more than 300 "deep state" enemies that Trump's self-described "secretary of retribution" had compiled in a target list, as Raw Story first reported; Fanone says he saw his name on it. If Trump wants him imprisoned, he'd rather be killed in a shootout. "I'll die right here on my  house," he said. "I'm not going to be in some 'Apprentice'  military tribunal." Fanone insists that he's not some "prepper weirdo," that he's just someone who understands how law enforcement can be weaponized against people — "and I fully expect that to happen."

Needless to say, Fanone is far from alone.

There are millions of others just like him.

Sadly, prominent voices just continue to ramp up the level of fear. If you doubt this, just consider something that Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez just said...

"We are about to enter a political period of fascism and authoritarianism. It is not uncommon to jail political dissidents or legislative opponents."

That is a completely and utterly insane statement.

But there are lots and lots of people out there that eat this stuff up.

On MSNBC, Rachel Maddow warned that Americans have chosen a "strongman, authoritarian system"...

Rachel Maddow is being mocked for her anti-Donald Trump monologue in which she warned the US was headed for an autocratic government after his resounding election victory.

The MSNBC star claimed that the voter turnout for the Republican president-elect was evidence Americans had 'let democracy go' and opted for, a 'strongman, authoritarian system'.

This sort of inflammatory rhetoric is extremely dangerous.

But after eight years of saying such things, she certainly isn't going to back down now.

Maddow is also urging her followers to become " pirates" once Trump takes office...

She likened the outcome to those seen in countries such as North Korea, Russia and China as she urged Democrats not to become, 'despondent'.

'Now we can work on being  pirates. We can work on being a thorn in the side to anyone who tries to turn this country into some tin-pot tyranny.

I understand that a lot of people may not want to hear this right now, but this story is not going to end well.

Nearly half of this country hates Trump and absolutely detests the idea of being governed by him.

All of the protest movements that we have seen in recent years will be dwarfed by what we will witness once Trump enters the White House.

So enjoy the relative tranquility that we are experiencing at this moment, because it won't last for long.

Kids today are soft.

Liberal Women All Over America Are Going On A Nationwide Sex Strike To Punish Men For Voting For Trump

MICHAEL SNYDER

Do they actually think that their plan will work? During this election, women overwhelmingly supported Kamala Harris and men overwhelmingly supported Donald Trump. So now some liberal women have decided that it is time for a nationwide sex strike in order to punish men for voting for Trump. Yes, they are quite serious about this...

Liberal women have sworn to go on sex strike over Donald Trump's election win.

Mr Trump swept to victory in Tuesday's presidential race that Democrats cast as a referendum on abortion rights and protections for women.

So let me get this straight. In order to “punish” us, these women are going to quit engaging in sexual immorality and start acting like chaste conservative Christian women?

And since they won't be having sex, liberal women won't be having as many abortions either.

I think that we can all live with that.

The women that are going on strike are taking inspiration from the “4B movement” in South Korea...

In short, the 4B movement is a vow to swear off men. It is called the 4B movement because in Korean, the four tenets each begin with bi, which means no, according to a paper published by two South Korean researchers at Yonsei University's Institute of Humanities.

Apparently there are four primary pillars of the “4B movement”...

1. No marriage (Bihon): Advocates believe marriage often limits a woman's independence, as it traditionally assigns her the role of caregiver and homemaker.
2. No childbearing (Bichulsan): This principle opposes the societal expectation for women to bear and raise children, arguing that motherhood can trap women in lifelong caregiving roles.
3. No dating (Biyonae): The 4B Movement views dating as reinforcing male-centered dating norms and pressures that can compromise a woman's autonomy and emotional well-being.
4. No close relationships with men (Biyeonae): The movement encourages women to form supportive, empowering friendships with other women rather than depend on male companionship.

Since the 4B movement began, the fertility rate in South Korea has fallen dramatically, and it is now the lowest in the entire industrialized world.

In fact, it is being projected that the population of South Korea could be cut in half by the end of this century if current trends continue.

So this type of thinking has had a dramatic impact on that nation.

In addition to South Korea, major sex strikes have been instituted in many other countries around the world in recent years...

Sex strikes are a form of protest more widespread than the 4B movement, have taken place in countries around the world including Colombia, Kenya, Liberia, Italy, the Philippines, South Sudan and Togo.

They also have an ancient pedigree. Aristophanes' comedy Lysistrata famously telling how Athenian women conspired to deny their men sex in order to end the Peloponnesian War.

Apparently many women consider the complete rejection of all men to be a radical form of “female empowerment”...

While the 4B Movement may seem radical to some, it emphasizes a message of female empowerment through non-conformity and a rejection of prescribed gender roles. For many women in the U.S. and abroad, it represents a way to prioritize self-determination, foster communities with other women, and question societal norms around marriage and motherhood.

Can you imagine what would happen if all men and all women decided to embrace this type of ideology?

We would have no marriages, no families, no children and no future.

It is literally a suicidal ideology.

But right now a lot of liberal women are absolutely determined to exercise their power any way that they can. On TikTok, large numbers of young liberal women are posting videos in which they pledge to be celibate...

In one video shared on TikTok, a young woman pledges to go celibate and encourages others to delete dating apps in order to “exercise sovereignty” over their bodies.

“As a woman, my bodily autonomy matters and this is my way to exercise sovereignty over that,” she says.

“So I highly encourage any other women who are single and still care about progressing women’s rights and still fighting for our bodily autonomy to do the same. Delete your dating apps.”

The woman also encourages others to seek out their female friends for comfort “if you need somebody to cuddle” and describes the 4B movement, which originated in South Korea, as a “point of inspiration”.

Apparently the issue of abortion is motivating a lot of these young women to embrace the 4B movement, and some of them are promising to abstain from sex until a new president is elected in 2028...

"Men will always be against women," read the caption in one TikTok video of a young woman crying in a car, encouraging women to join the 4B movement. "Women are just as capable to be presidents as a man."

In another video, a woman says that "for the next four years I am going to abstain from sex with men".

A separate video was captioned: "I think it's time for American women to participate in our own 4B movement."

Many of the videos addressed concerns over abortion, which was on the ballot in 10 states and was central to the Harris campaign.

So what happens if a Republican is elected in 2028?

Will these young women remain celibate until 2032?

Personally, I seriously doubt that any of these women were dating Trump voters.

So it won't be conservative men that they are hurting.

Instead, it will be liberal men that will be losing out on sex, and most of them probably voted for Harris anyway.

But that isn't stopping these young women from pretending that their newfound celibacy will severely punish their political opponents...

"As a woman, my bodily autonomy matters and this is my way to exercise sovereignty over that," one woman said in a video posted on TikTok. "So I highly encourage any other women who are single and still care about progressing women's rights and still fighting for our bodily autonomy to do the same. Delete your dating apps."

"All I have to say is good luck getting laid," said another TikTok user through mocking laughter. "Especially in Florida, because me and my girlfriends are participating in the 4B movement."

They don't seem to understand that many of us that are conservative are absolutely thrilled that large numbers of single liberal women have decided to stop sleeping around.

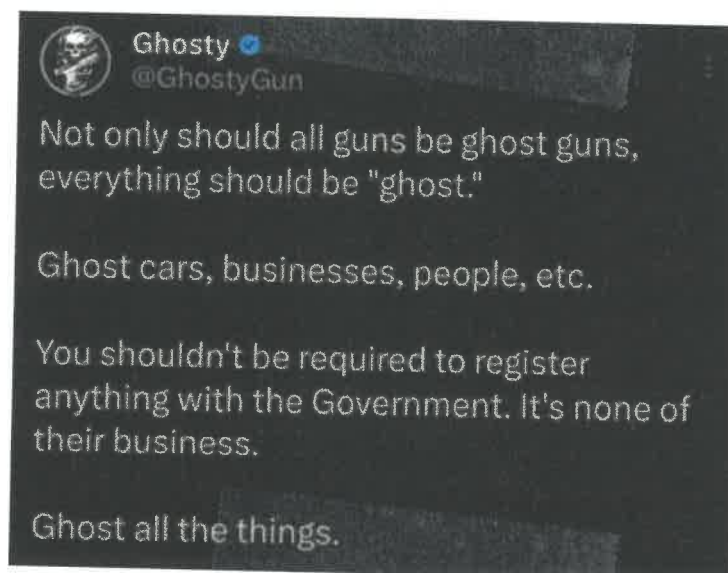

If we could get the entire country to abstain from sex outside of marriage, that would be wonderful.

Of course that is not going to happen.

I just wish that we could get more people to understand that when we do things the right way we will be blessed, and when we do things the wrong way we will be cursed.

And as a nation we have definitely been under a curse in recent years.

So I am all in favor of this nationwide sex strike by liberal women. May it last as long as possible.

The Kosher President

By Chuck Baldwin

Donald Trump is now America's President-Elect. As I said previously, I fully expected that Trump would win by a comfortable electoral margin and that it would be a clean sweep for the GOP.

As a result of the big Republican win, most evangelicals and conservatives are predictably acting like the Millennium has arrived. Despite everything that has transpired since the dawn of this century, despite the Tea Party movement during the Ron Paul years, despite the ubiquitous bumper stickers pasted to the vehicles of conservatives that said, "I don't believe the mainstream media," today's evangelicals and conservatives are still trapped in the artificial left-right paradigm.

Republicans: Good. Democrats: Bad. That's everything you need to know.

But think about this: During the first 24 years of this 21st century, we've had 12 years of Democrat presidents in the White House and 12 years of Republican presidents in the White House. Tell me, what difference has it made? No matter who was president, America continued to fight Israel's wars, play the role of the world's policeman, bully foreign governments (including political assassinations), build its global empire and steal minerals and oil from foreign countries. America's national debt continued to rise exponentially, deficit spending continued to rise exponentially, the surveillance/police state continued to expand and the economic wellbeing of average working families continued to deteriorate.

And regardless of Trump's anti-climate change rhetoric, there is no doubt in my mind that he will accelerate the Green New Deal.

In response to my pre-election column two weeks back, I received several emails from angry Christians who said: "Chuck, if you turn your back on Donald Trump, you are turning your back on God." These are the same folks, of course, that have repeatedly told me, "Chuck, if you turn your back on Israel, you are turning your back on God."

Folks, if that is not idolatry, I don't know what is.

God's Holy Word says absolutely nothing about turning one's back on a politician—a corrupt, blasphemous politician at that—being tantamount to turning one's back on God. Neither does Zionist Israel have anything whatsoever to do with Biblical Israel. In truth, God Himself is the One Who has turned His back on Old Covenant Israel and, by so doing, destroyed that nation FOREVER. The State of Israel in Palestine today is a devilish counterfeit.

What God's Holy Word declares is that those who turn their backs on JESUS are turning their backs on God. (John 3:18, 36; 10:30; 14:6, 9; Acts 4:12; I John 4:2, 3)

But many evangelicals and conservatives have elevated partisan politics in general and Donald Trump in particular to God-like status.

At the time of this writing, Trump has announced but a few names he has appointed to his administration. But the ones he has appointed are just more of the same—especially regarding foreign policy. I am reminded of the sagacity of Dr. Ron Paul: "Personnel is policy."

What I'm seeing happening at this early stage is Trump filling his administration—especially the key positions—with uber-Zionists. As I have noted—and Trump himself has often declared—The Donald is the most Zionist president America has ever had; and I am confident that this second term of Trump's will be dominated and controlled by Zionist influencers to an even greater degree than was his first administration.

But, of course, on the whole, evangelicals and conservatives have zero comprehension of the satanic evil that Zionism represents. In fact, most of them enthusiastically embrace and endorse all things Zionist.

By nature, Donald Trump only knows one way to operate, and that is to bully people by intimidation and brute-force to do what he wants them to do. That has been Trump's modus operandi during his entire life—professionally and personally.

And I can say the following with confidence: The United States is not what it was in the 1990s and early 2000s. We are NOT the superpower of the world. America's military and economic global hegemony has deteriorated much. America no longer has overwhelming military superiority over Iran and Russia. And those nations—along with several others—cannot be intimidated into submission by the U.S. anymore.

If Donald Trump tries to bully Iran—or bomb Iran—into submission, he will launch World War III. And when that happens, cataclysmic devastation will envelop the world, including here in America. Oh! And in the process, the State of Israel will be completely annihilated. But at that point, no one will care—not even John Hagee.

The American people gave Trump a landslide victory mainly because they are sick and tired of fighting these stupid (Trump's word) wars. But Trump appears to be filling his administration with uber-Zionists with his early selections of Marco Rubio as Secretary of State, Kristi Noem as Secretary of Homeland Security, Mike Waltz as National Security Advisor, Pete Hegseth as Secretary of Defense, Elise Stefanik as U.S. ambassador to the U.N. and uber-Christian Zionist Mike Huckabee as U.S. ambassador to Israel. Appointing Huckabee to be ambassador to Israel is tantamount to putting a convict in charge of the prison. Any hope of a new Trump administration promoting peace in the Middle East is beginning to look like nothing more than a pipedream. These are the kinds of people who will lead us into more and more dangerous wars and also attempt to suppress the freedom of speech (Project Esther) here in America.

Here is further food for thought on the subject from W.M. Peterson:

“You can’t tolerate Pharaoh, so you’ll vote for Nebuchadnezzar, and then go to God on your knees and ask for blessing and protection. God is not mocked! He doesn’t support evil, whether “lesser” or any other type.”—
Michael A. Hoffman

How strange, eh? Trump wins the election and all’s quiet on the Western front. No Antifa or BLM thugs tearing up major cities; no suspicious activity at the polls or meaningful cases of voter fraud; no histrionic media warning about the impending ‘rise of fascism.’ Nothing! It’s almost as if Trump was the deep state’s candidate all along, something I have contended since October 7, 2023.

My MAGA friends assure me the vote for Trump was simply ‘too big to rig’ and that his victory is cause for uninhibited celebration. Our broken election system that garnered so much attention just four years ago has miraculously been restored and conservative Americans can once again place their faith in the democratic process. Hallelujah!

Both candidates in our two-party system are wholly dependent on wealthy Jewish donors for campaign financing and, therefore, pledge their allegiance not to the country they’re elected to represent, but rather a criminally-insane foreign state whose interests, more often than not, diverge significantly from our own. Trump hardly differs from a Hillary Clinton or John McCain in this respect.

Following October 7, 2023, a noticeable shift in the attitudes of many Establishment insiders occurred. Influential Jews in finance, politics and media, who forcefully opposed the MAGA movement in the past, began throwing their support behind the erstwhile ‘new Hitler,’ eventually raising hundreds of millions of dollars for his presidential campaign. Among his many newfound supporters is Silicon Valley’s Jacob Helberg, a lifelong Democrat and former benefactor of Pete Buttigieg, who became a top financial contributor to Trump in the aftermath of October 7. Helberg is a senior advisor to Alex Karp — the Jewish CEO of Palantir Technology — and was instrumental in the passage of the Protecting Americans from Foreign Adversary Controlled Applications Act, legislation which forced the sale of social media platform Tik Tok due, in all actuality, to its “anti-Israel bias.” Palantir (founded by Karp and JD Vance’s political mentor Peter Thiel), has very close ties to the state of Israel and has provided the Israeli Defense Forces with surveillance systems used to spy on Palestinians in the West Bank and Gaza, as well as unsuspecting people around the world.

The wealthy individuals who have cozied up to Trump over the past 12 months are single-issue voters, and that issue is Israel.

It's probably safe to assume that the millions of dollars Trump receives from people like Helberg and Thiel {not to mention Miriam Adelson's $100 million} motivates his rhetoric about deporting "anti-Israel protesters" and bombing Iran more so than any deeply held philosemitic convictions. Many of his supporters, however, fail to make this connection, and as a result, adopt similar attitudes and opinions to those their hero has been paid so handsomely to express. Indeed, the major benefit of a Trump presidency from the perspective of these people is his unprecedented popularity, which automatically ensures countless supporters for the Zionist cause. Had Kamala Harris been installed as America's 47th president, I honestly believe a majority of Trump's base would've quickly grown tired of watching material and financial aid go to Israel, thus creating a fissure in the Zionist edifice and potentially leading to an overdue reckoning with the Jewish Question. As it stands, Trump will likely live up to his billing as history's most pro-Israel president and he'll almost certainly be granted a free pass by his supporters, who seem to view him in the same starry-eyed way as a child views his favorite athlete or movie star.

I probably wouldn't agree with Mr. Peterson on everything, but his understanding of the evils of Zionism is spot on. And right now, the enthusiastic acceptance of Zionism by Christian evangelicals and Republican conservatives—and the power that Zionism wields over America's federal government (and many State governments)—is the single biggest threat to America's future.

Peterson began his missive by quoting my good friend Michael Hoffman (author of the blockbuster must-read book Judaism's Strange Gods). So, I'll conclude my missive by quoting him as well.

Unless he {Trump} turns over a new leaf — and every human being deserves the benefit of the doubt at the start of a new chapter in life — based on his past record (not rhetoric), Trump is not the good guy in this war.

He is assuredly the vessel into which we have poured our outrage and discontent. He is outwardly the symbol of resistance to the psychic dislocation which has battered us for decades. Trump personifies our hunger for recompense and a course-correction of the American ship of state.

There's a worm in that apple, however. Trump is suffering from a double mind. He calls Liz Cheney a war hawk and yet continues to ally with Mike Pompeo, one of the most foreign-war crazed of the Neocons. In his first administration Trump promoted Mr. Pompeo to CIA director and Secretary of State. He remains close to him now.

Donald Trump has been given the opportunity of a generation to avert global war and restore at least a modicum of prosperity and constitutionalism to the United States. And I will be praying for him, as the Scripture tells me to pray, that, due to his decisions, we may lead a quiet and peaceable life. (1 Timothy 2:2) That is my prayer for each president we elect.

The problem is, as long as our politicians and pastors are controlled by Zionist-inspired Israel-based prophecy doctrines—including unconditional support for the State of Israel—there will be no peace.

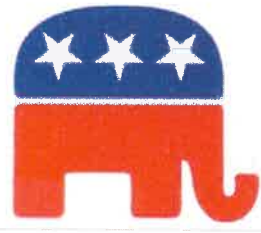

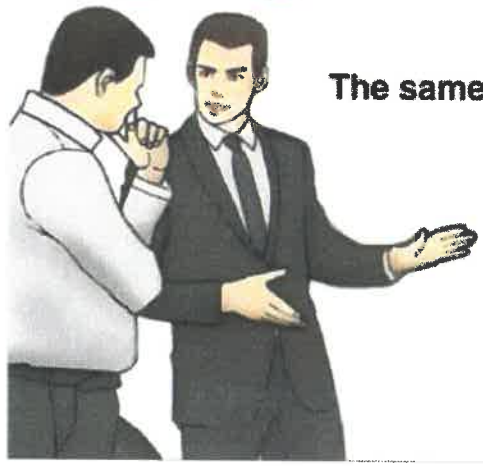

And, tragically, despite the golden opportunity that sits before him, Donald Trump is not only a Zionist; he is the kosher president.

They hate our country. They'll invite the world's economic migrants, call you racist for opposing it, send your jobs abroad, sexualize your children, and spy on you if you point it out.

LINCOLN'S VIEWS ON THE NEGRO RACE

THE EMANCIPATION PROCLAMATION OF 1862
DID NOT FREE ANY SLAVES; IT WAS INTENDED AS A WAR MEASURE TO INCITE REVOLT.

According to popular myth, Abraham Lincoln "saved the Union" and "freed the slaves". Neither is correct. The Emancipation Proclamation of September 1862 did not set one slave free. It was intended only as a war measure to encourage a slave revolt against their masters in the South. Its intended result failed. Slavery was outlawed by the 13th Amendment in December 1865. Lincoln's personal views were far different than the popular narrative commonly believed.

"I am not in favor of making voters or jurors of Negroes, nor of qualifying them to hold office."

LINCOLN'S CAMPAIGN SPEECH

"I have no purpose, directly or indirectly, to interfere with the institution of slavery."

LINCOLN'S 1ST INAUGURAL ADDRESS

"I am a little uneasy about the abolishment of slavery in this District (of Columbia.) If I could save the Union without freeing any slave I would do it."

"I believe it would be better to export them all to some fertile country with a good climate, which they could have to themselves."

—Lincoln's letter to Horace Greeley

"What I would most desire would be the separation of the white and black races. I, as well as Judge Douglas, am in favor of the race to which I belong, having the superior position. I have never said anything to the contrary. I am not nor ever have been in favor of bringing about the social and political equality of the white and black races."

ABRAHAM LINCOLN

When asked about the fate of the slaves when suddenly set free, Lincoln said; "Let them root hog or die."

LINCOLN'S TOTAL WAR POLICY

During the Union Army's invasion of the Christian South in 1861-1865, they implemented their "total war policy" in waging war against military combatants and civilian non-combatants. Their aim was the destruction of Southern culture in committing barbaric acts of atrocities and terrorism upon the persons and property of Southern civilians. Nothing was off limits, including but not limited to:

- Arson of private homes, barns, mills, corn sheds
- Killed livestock, cattle, pigs, chickens, sheep, family pets
- Destroyed farm equipment
- Desecrated and/or burned libraries, churches, orphanages, parsonages
- Random torture and/or killing of Southern civilians of any age or sex
- Raided homes stealing personal items from both black and white civilians
- Raped both black and white women and girls
- Burned whole cities and towns – desecrated cemeteries
- Grave robbing in search of valuables, leaving dead bodies on the ground
- Permanently displaced scores of Southern women and children to the North
- Forced ministers to swear allegiance to Lincoln under threat of arrest/deportation

"If it costs ten years, and ten to recover the general prosperity, the destruction of the South is worth so much." Ralph Waldo Emerson

These crimes were not committed in the Soviet Union, China or some savage third world country, but committed in America, by Americans against Americans. Lincoln always considered the South a part of "his own country", therefore he declared war on his own people. This is what tyrants do best.

THE TRUTH ABOUT ⁵⁴ NORTHERN ABOLITION

Contrary to Popular Belief the Goal Was Not “Freedom for All Men” but the Destruction of Southern Culture & Constitutional Government

Of all the social and political movements in America, the destructive forces of nineteenth century Northern Abolitionism has been the most devastating in undermining the moral, social, political and spiritual fabric of our nation. Posing as a religious and humanitarian cause in order to abolish the institution of slavery, its zealots were willing to bring about the downfall of the American Republic for which they feignly fought to save.

The forces of abolitionism were so furious that every level of Northern society were overwhelmed by its deceitful philosophy. They believed that any ‘means justified the end’. This included the intelligentsia, Congressmen, ‘Christian’ ministers preaching their fiery perverted ‘gospel’, businessmen who financed the cause and insurrectionists committing brutal murders and terroristic acts.

Regardless of the severe price that both the North and South would pay to accomplish their goal, they believed war would bring about their desired utopia. Thus the liberal media convinced the majority of the Northern populace to support Lincoln’s war of aggression upon the South to eradicate the evils of slavery. To this day the liberal media-manufactured issue of slavery is set forth as the primary cause of the so-called ‘Civil War’.

Presbyterian pastor and theology professor, James H. Thornwell of Columbia Theological Seminary in South Carolina, said:

“The parties to this conflict are not merely abolitionists and slaveholders - they are atheists, socialists, communists, red Republicans, Jacobins, on the one side, and the friends of order and regulated freedom on the other. In one word, the world is a battleground - Christianity and atheism are the combatants and the progress of humanity is at stake.”

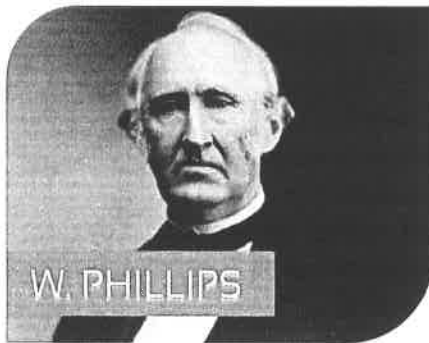

Statements by 19th century abolitionists:

Henry Wadsworth Longfellow-“Meanwhile the great war goes thundering on. I hope you are cheery about it, and have faith in something and somebody. The slave power must be utterly annihilated. There can be no peace without that done; and for that I devoutly pray.”

Ralph Waldo Emerson "If it costs ten years and ten to recover the general prosperity, the destruction of the South is worth so much." In 1859 before John Brown was executed, Emerson referred to Brown as "The Saint, whose fate yet hangs in suspense, but whose martyrdom, if it shall be perfected, will make the gallows as glorious as the Cross."

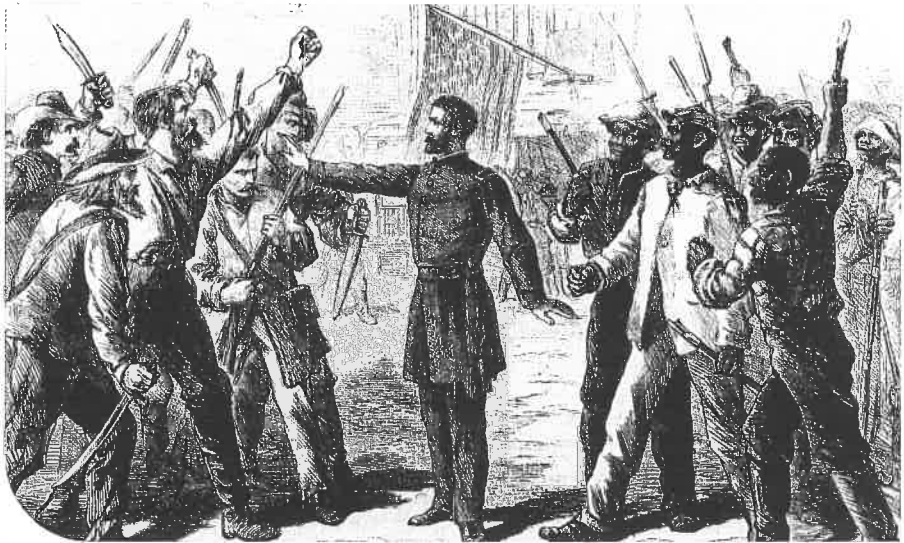

Wendell Phillips - Lawyer, social activist, president of Anti-slavery Society in 1865 said: "The Constitution of our fathers was a mistake. Tear it to pieces and make a better. Don't say the machine is out of order; it is in order; it does what the framers intended-protect slavery. Our aim is disunion, breaking up the states! The Republican party is a party of the North pledged against the South."

"The land is ours-confiscated, guaranteed; its title given to the soldier who has finished his service. Give it to the black man, who is willing to take it, and plant a state, under the guarantee of the Union..." "I know that it seems something like absolute barbarian conquest, I allow it.

I don't believe there will be any peace until 347,000 slave holders are either hung or exiled. History shows no precedent of getting rid of an aristocracy like this, except by the death of the generation."

William Lloyd Garrison - Journalist, president of Anti-slavery Society from 1843-1865 - abolitionist fanatic said: "This Union is a lie! The American Union is an imposition -- a covenant with death, and an agreement with hell!...I am for its overthrow!...Up with the flag of disunion, that we may have a free and glorious Republic of our own; and when the hour shall come, the hour will have arrived that shall witness the overthrow of slavery."

Resolutions of the American Anti-Slavery Society:

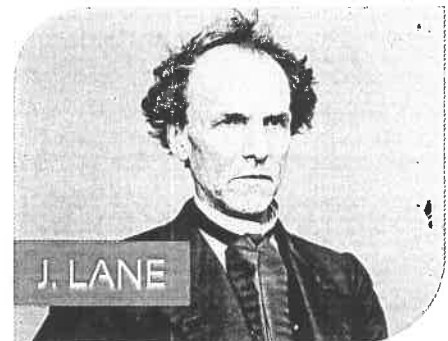

Resolved, That secession from the United States government is the duty of every Abolitionist, since no one can take office, or deposit his vote under its constitution without violating his anti-slavery principles, and rendering himself an abettor to the slaveholder in his sin.

Resolved, That years of warfare against the slave power have convinced us that every act done in support of the American Union rivets the chain of the slave - that the only exodus of the slave to freedom, unless it be one of blood, must be over the remains of the present American Church, and the grave of the present Union.

Resolved, That the abolitionists of this country should make it one of the primary objects of this agitation, to dissolve the American Union."

Resolutions passed at a proto-Republican Convention, Boston, MA: "Resolved, That we seek a dissolution of the Union; and Resolved, That we do hereby declare ourselves the enemies of the Constitution, of the Union, and of the Government of the United States; and Resolved, That we proclaim it as our unalterable purpose and determination to live and labor for the dissolution of the present Union."

Kansas Senator James Lane: "I would like to live long enough to see every white man in South Carolina, in hell, and the Negroes inheriting their territory. It would not wound my feelings any day to find the dead bodies of rebel sympathizers pierced with bullet holes in every street and alley of Washington. Yes, I would regret this, for I would not like to witness all this waste of powder and lead. I would rather have them hung, and the ropes saved! Let them dangle until their stinking bodies rot and fall to the ground piece by piece."

WHY DESTROY THE STATUES?

The Destruction of Confederate Statues is a Precursor to Broader Cultural Attacks, Aiming to Erase American Values and Identities

The rage of the current cultural genocide in our nation started with the removal and demolition of Confederate Statues. At the level of hate that the Marxist mobs are tearing down every icon they deem as unacceptable to their socio/political narrative, it is clear that their aim is the eventual overthrow of Western Civilization. The useful idiots of the mob not only hate the symbols and statues that reflect Southern culture, they hate the people that still believe in the Christian/Western European traditional way or life and live by its values.

John D. Davidson, Senior Editor of The Federalist, in his article; Democrats' Statue Toppling Is A Dress Rehearsal For Going After Actual People, stated;

"Once the removals and destruction of Confederate statues and memorials began a few years ago, it was inevitable that all historical figures from America's past, even those with no connection to the Confederacy, would be subject to removal, destruction or erasure.

"Why? Because the removal of statues and memorials by radical Democrats has never been about the past, it's always been about the raw exercise of political power and the assertion of tyranny over a free people in the here and now. This has been true of commie revolutionaries for a long time now. Simply put, what they do to statues is what they plan to do to their political enemies. It starts with statues and books, and eventually ends with people.

"None of this has anything to do with actual American history and everything to do with politics and power in the present.

"From the moment the first essay was written calling for the toppling of Robert E. Lee's likenesses, or the exhumation of Nathan Bedford Forrest's bones, it was inevitable that these Democrat revolutionaries would soon move on to other historical figures – as indeed they did. And when we saw the first images of a Black Lives Matter mob in the summer of 2020 pulling down random statues and defacing them with a mixture of glee and rage, it was clear enough that they would eventually move on to actual people.

"Arguing about history with these people is pointless because they don't care about historical realities or subtleties or facts, they only care about power... The last thing Democrats want right now is unity and peace among the American people. The idea that they genuinely believe toppling statues of historical figures from our nation's past will bring people together is laughable and doesn't deserve the dignity of a response.

"It's not complicated. For Democrats, tearing down statues is a kind of dress rehearsal, not much different than book burning was for the Nazis. They want to erase their opponents from American public life, and if they can't do it in an orderly and official way, they'll use a mob."

CONFEDERATE BATTLE FLAG

The origin of the design of this flag has its roots in both Celtic and Christian history and represents the principles of personal freedom and constitutional government.

The letter "X" when positioned on its side (⌘) is known as the Cross of St. Andrew and dates back to early Christian history. Andrew was born in the city of Bethsaida on the north shore of Galilee (John 1:44), but lived in nearby Capernaum (Mark 1:21, 29). He worked with his brother Simon Peter as a fisherman and became a disciple of John the Baptist through whose preaching he became convinced that Jesus was the Messiah (John 1:35, 40). Andrew became one of the twelve apostles of our Lord and was active in the early Christian Church in Palestine (Acts 1:13).

Tradition says that Andrew was responsible for spreading the Christian Faith throughout Asia Minor and Greece. For his fervent testimony of Jesus Christ, he was put to death by the Romans when he was around 85 years old in AD 69 in the city of Patras, Greece by being pinned to a cross. At his request, the cross was turned on its side because he felt he was not worthy to be crucified like his Lord.

In AD 832, the Scots adopted Andrew as their patron Saint and the saltire as the symbol for their national flag. For hundreds of years, brave Scottish warriors have fought under this noble banner. This symbol is also known as Jacob's Cross and represents the patriarch Jacob/Israel when crossing his arms while blessing the two sons of Joseph (Genesis 48:8-22).

Around 600 BC, the Greeks designated "X" as the letter "chi" in their alphabet which in New Testament times came to represent Christ. Therefore, the letter X, when used alone or in combination with other letters, often stands for the word Christ, as in "Xmas".

The attack on the Confederate Battle Flag from Marxist elements and social change-agents is because it is an easy target due to its perceived connection with past oppression, therefore considered to be 'racist' in this Cultural Revolution. The institution of slavery existed four years under the Confederate flag, and eighty years under the Stars and Stripes of the United States. In reality, this flag is hated by the ruling elite of the American Empire because it stands for "Resistance to Tyranny." The socialist revolutionaries hate both the flag and those who understand its true history and meaning of Southern culture, heritage and state sovereignty.

American Indian Tea Tincture (Double Extraction) 2oz bottle -NOW ONLY $45!!!!

This Tincture is typically recommended for those that travel, are unable to drink the Tea in larger quantities at one time, work on the road or who are interested solely in the maintenance value.

This is only due to the cost. The American Indian Tea Tincture (double extraction) contains naturally occurring biochemicals called glucanoids and these explain the strong anti-tumor effects of the tea tincture. Polysaccharides are present that seem to imitate interferon and interleukin. It is also an anti-inflammatory as the natural steroids that it produces, are useful in the treatment of arthritis and painful autoimmune and inflammatory diseases. The Tea Tincture is also an overall body detox. The dietary fibers that are chitinous substances are present in large quantities. These components have a chelation/absorption effect on any toxic material/metals that is left in the bowels and this helps hasten the removal of these toxins. It's been studied through many observations that when drinking the Tea Tincture, the body's reaction is to produce massive amounts of neutrophils and lymphocytes and other white blood cells. These WBC are expecting to locate an infection and they are programmed to kill only those that have the markers that they recognize as an enemy!

It has proven to be helpful for those with thyroid issues too! Recent studies have explored the role of sea vegetables in estrogen-related and colon cancers, osteoarthritis, and other conditions.
